The passenger equipment escaped with slight injury. Traffic was tied up about three hours as a result.

| The debris was set on fire by a wrecking crew after the accident. There were no passengers in the passenger cars. The latter train was in charge of Engineer Edward Lyles, of this city, and Conductor E. W. Belew, also of this city. They escaped injury. A misunderstanding of signals on the part of the crew of the freight train is believed to have caused the accident. However, the railroad officials are now engaged in the work of paicing the blame.
